Building on the success of its summer webinar series, the Canadian Association for Graduate Studies (CAGS) is pleased to announce its newest online event – the 2020 CAGS Virtual Symposia, to be held from 24-27 November. This free, week-long event will feature four unique webinars on some of the most pressing issues facing graduate education in Canada, including mental health and wellness, remote graduate supervision, adapting to the new normal, anti-black racism, and inclusion.

Discussions on the aforementioned topics will be led by a diverse group of presenters from across Canada, including deans of graduate studies, faculty members, administrators, and graduate students. GPS' own Associate Dean Dr. Nathan Hall will be part of the conversation on Graduate Student Mental Health and Wellness.

Visit the CAGS website for a brief description of the webinars offered in this series. More detailed information about each presentation will be provided in the coming days.

Registration for the 2020 CAGS Virtual Symposia opens on Monday, 9 November.

Please note that the 2020 CAGS Virtual Symposia will be conducted using the Zoom video conference platform. The webinars are free of charge and registration is open to all deans, associate deans, faculty members, administrators, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students. The webinars will be presented in English, and French interpretation will be provided simultaneously through a third-party service.
